

Too Much About Common Core Stinks!

Private & Home Schools NOT EXEMPT

The Experts in EDUCATION speak against the experts in Government Bureaucracy:

“While they may have had a long and distinguished list of advisers, they did not seem to have sufficient experience to select the wheat from the chaff. How, otherwise, can one explain their selecting an experimental approach to geometry, teaching it on the basis of rigid motions, that has not been successfully tried anywhere in the world?”

“The Common Core mathematics standards fail on clarity and rigor compared to better state standards and to those of high-achieving countries.”

“Parents are woefully uninformed; many have no idea that the nationalized education program with federal testing to begin in 2014 has been introduced in their child's school.”

“The Common Core standards claim to be “bench marked against international standards” but this phrase is meaningless. They are actually two or more years behind international expectations by eighth grade, and only fall further behind as they talk about grades 8-12.”

“Yes, we can withdraw from Common Core any time we want, just as we can withdraw from the federal highway program any time we want. But we don't do that. We're on the federal hook and they're reeling us in.”

~Anonymous Senator

“I learned that not only test scores, but additional personal information about my children and our family would be tracked in a state-wide data collection project for the express purpose of making decisions about their educational path and “aligning” them with the workforce.”

“I learned that there are fields for tracking home-schooled children in this database too.”

“I learned that the financing, writing, evaluation, and promotion of the standards had all been done by non governmental special interest groups with a common agenda.”
